Trust Accounts

The Fastest Way to Lose Your License with the State Bar and for us to cancel your Agency is to Mismanage Your IOLTA/Escrow/Trust Account!!

Intent to Repay

- In a recent criminal case, the government successfully argued that “intent to repay” is not a defense to wire fraud charged
- “Borrowing” from the escrow account is actually a crime and possibly a felony.

Trust Account Designation

- Trust Designation – A Trust Account, checks and deposits slips must be designated as a trust account by use of terms such as “trust account,” “fiduciary account,” or “escrow account.”

Who Signs The Checks?

- Only a lawyer or a person under the direct supervision of the lawyer may be an authorized person to sign IOLTA/Escrow/Trust Account checks.

FAQ#1

- Title Agent X tells our auditors that they have done some real estate closings and unfortunately they have extra money in their trust account after the documents have been recorded. The Title Agent is confused about what to do with the extra money when the person to whom the money is owed won't cash the check.

FAQ#1

- As you all know, you should attempt to send the money back to the party to whom it is owed. Unfortunately, in many situations, the party to whom the money is owed will not cash the check. In these situations (generally 2-5 years after first attempted check was mailed), you will want to turn the money over to the Alabama Department of Revenue.

FAQ#2

- Are lawyers subject to discipline for misconduct as a result of the mismanagement of a title company?

FAQ#2

- Answer: Yes

Hypothetical 1

- May an attorney use websites such as Groupon or other “daily deal” websites to market discounted legal services in the form of redeemable certificates to prospective clients?
- No. The use of daily deal websites, such as Groupon, violates or potentially violates a number of rules of Professional Conduct.

Hypothetical 2

- Lawyer X does real estate closings and is expanding their practice to include estate planning. They wanted to know if at closing they could hand the buyer and seller a flier advertising these services.
- Whether or not Lawyer X may handout the advertising flier depends on whether the buyer and seller are his actual clients at the closing. If Lawyer X is representing only the lender during the closing, then the handing out of fliers would constitute impermissible in-person solicitation in violation of Rule 7.3

- A lawyer has been approached by a real estate company with a proposal that he be the "preferred closing attorney" for the company. This means that the company would recommend him to close the loans on properties the company has sold. The lawyer would not represent the real estate company at closing nor would he otherwise have any attorney-client relationship with the company. The lawyer's client in the closing would, in most instances, be the lender. The real estate company would provide the lawyer with office space in its building; however, the office space would be rented at fair market value compared to similar space in the same area. The advantage to the real estate company in this arrangement would be having the lawyer available in close proximity to its office to close loans on properties it sold. The lawyer would also provide seminars for the company's agents, apparently without charge, to instruct them in matters involving contract writing, closing preparation and agent liability. Is such an arrangement ethically permissible?

Hypothetical 3

- The ethical concern presented by the proposed arrangement is the possibility that the real estate company could be perceived to be acting as the lawyer's agent for the purpose of soliciting clients on the lawyer's behalf. Paragraph (a) of Rule 7.3 of the Rules of Professional Conduct.
- Another concern is the prohibition against giving something of value to someone for recommending your services. Rule 7.2(a)
- The providing of free legal instruction to the employees of the real estate company could conceivably be construed as giving something of value in exchange for the company's recommendation.
